

Sean Rowley devised the Guilty Pleasures concept as a slot on his former BBC London radio show, to attempt to 'reclaim' songs that are viewed as "slightly shameful to love".

His sell out club Guilty Pleasures takes place at KOKO in Camden Town every month, and has spawned two compilation albums, a Sunday afternoon radio show on BBC London 94.9, and a television show on ITV1 hosted by Fearne Cotton on which established performers performed cover versions of Guilty Pleasures favourites.

Guilty Pleasures tours the world and is available for festivals and private events