Chris McGlade has spent twenty six years working everywhere from the unforgiving working mens clubs in the North of England, all the way to the glitz and glamour of the Hollywood comedy store on the rock comedy show with American comedy superstar Dane Cook and the prestigious LA Improv comedy club!

Chris recently starred as Pete in Ken Loaches new film "I Daniel Blake" and as the Boxing Coach George, in Billy Elliot the musical, in London's West End

He has successfully performed at the Edinburgh and Glasgow Comedy festivals and reached final of Old Comedian of the Year after a seven year lay off from his comedy. He has played alongside Frank Carson at the Sunderland Empire Theatre and played the prestigious Leicester Square Theatre and Soho Theatre in his own one man show. The editor of Chortle named Chris' solo show in his Top 10 gig highlights of 2017

In 2004, Chris started a political campaign in his home town of Redcar against the local authority there and the countries biggest house builder Persimmon Homes. He beat them in 2010 in the House of Lords and changed the law in England regarding open spaces.

He also stood as an independent candidate for Redcar in the 2005 general election, as part of his political campaign and came fourth with 2379 votes, the seventh highest fourth place in the country in that general election.

'Come the next revolution, Chris McGlade could be the next Alexei Sayle' Chortle - Steve Bennett ****

'This is weaponised comedy, locked and loaded. It is awesome' The Scotsman – Kate Copstick

'Intense, unique show unlike anything else you'll see on the Fringe' Beyond the Joke - Bruce Dessau ****
